Simultaneous roundtables Participants select between three simultaneous sessions, each of them zooming in on a transversal theme of the outcome documents and highlighting the complementarity between the workstreams. The roundtables will aim to identify practical pathways for implementation, including challenges, enabling factors and good practices.	14:00 – 15:30
Roundtable 1: A whole-of-society approach to build the foundations of IHL The consultations consistently demonstrated that respect for IHL begins long before hostilities. Effective respect for IHL depends upon political leadership, professional armed forces, functioning institutions and societies that internalize the values of humanity and human dignity – at home and through a global culture of compliance. This roundtable will present the conclusions emerging from several workstreams on how states can ensure that the norms and principles of IHL are deeply rooted within their society, and how governments, armed forces, national IHL committees and civil society can collectively strengthen institutional preparedness, professional military culture and public support for IHL. Moderation: Mr. Itonde Kakoma, President and CEO, Interpeace Discussants: - H.E. Alexander Kmentt, Permanent Representative of Austria in Geneva - Gwendolyn T. Pang, Secretary-General, Philippine Red Cross - Professor Dr Thilo Marauhn, Chairman of the German IHL Committee - Lt. Col. - Daniel Vega Pinzon, Coordinator of the International Humanitarian Law Unit, Directorate of Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Colombia
Roundtable 2: Protecting civilians - essential services as a lifeline Protecting civilian populations requires protecting the services on which their very lives and livelihoods depend. Very often, the risk of disruption or collapse of the systems that sustain daily life is added to the already devastating immediate effects of military operations. When access to healthcare, water, electricity, sanitation and other essential services is compromised, the consequences can be far-reaching, long-lasting and extend beyond the territories at war to create repercussions at a global level. This roundtable will present the conclusions emerging from several workstreams on how military planning and operational decision-making can better protect civilian populations by accounting for the interconnected nature of infrastructure and the foreseeable humanitarian consequences of military operations. Moderation: Professor Janina Dill, Dame Louise Richardson Chair in Global Security, Blavatnik School of Government, University of Oxford Discussants: - Matjaž Marko, Deputy Director General for Multilateral Affairs and International Law, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Slovenia - Indra Rosandry, Director for Legal Affairs and Political Security Treaties, MFA, Indonesia - Jawad Ali, Deputy Permanent Representative of Pakistan in Geneva - Dr. Dalia Samhouri, Global Lead, Attacks on Health Care Initiative, WHO Health Emergencies Programme, World Health Organization - Agnieszka Cholewinska, Senior Protection Advisor, Norwegian Red Cross	14:00 – 15:30 Room B
Roundtable 3: Ensuring technology upholds humanity and IHL Technological developments are transforming armed conflict while increasing the dependence of civilian populations on digital infrastructure and interconnected networks. While new technologies may enable belligerents to achieve military objectives with less harm to civilians and essential services than kinetic operations, their use also creates risks of seeing infrastructure, networks and communications being shut down, data being erased and more generally societies being brought to a standstill. This roundtable will present	14:00 – 15:30 Room C the conclusions from several workstreams on how technology can be designed and used in ways that strengthen the protection of those affected by war. Moderation: H.E.
